

US Supreme Court Considers Overhaul to Administrative Law [THE LEGAL INTELLIGENCER]

The Supreme Court "is currently considering its most consequential challenge to 'the administrative state' in decades," say Stephen Miller and Andrew Linz in an article in The Legal Intelligencer. Overturning Chevron - the seminal doctrine, announced 40 years ago in Chevron v. Natural Resources Defense Council (1984), which lower courts routinely apply to resolve challenges to administrative regulations - "would expand the role of the courts in determining agencies' authority to regulate in areas like the environment, the financial industry, workplace safety and health care."
