

Why Microsoft's $68.7B Activision Play Will Probably Succeed

Thursday, January 20, 2022

Jonathan Grossman was quoted in an article published by Law360 that discusses how Microsoft's $68.7 billion deal to buy Activision Blizzard is sure to receive heavy scrutiny from U.S. antitrust and competition regulators. Jonathan explains how the mere fact that the deal will be thoroughly reviewed by authorities doesn't mean it's likely to be blocked. "I'm having a hard time telling a story about how competitive harm can result here, because the platform Microsoft owns does not act as the gatekeeper to how most content is purchased," he said.

To read the full article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Antitrust & Competition